The Reagan administration has signaled its intention to ask for $270 million in new military aid for the Contras over 18 months if the peace plan fails.

Wright cited as signs of progress the pledge by Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega to begin a partial, unilateral cease-fire, the reopening of the opposition newspaper La Prensa, the resumption of broadcasts by a Roman Catholic-operated radio station and the appointment of a reconciliation commission led by Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, a leading government critic.

"All of these give me reason to have hope," Wright told reporters.

The cease-fire announcement from Managua was drawing skeptical responses from the administration, however, with Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams calling it "a trick" to get the Contras to surrender.

In Miami, Aristides Sanchez, one of six members of the Contra political directorate, said the rebels will not respect the cease-fire. "We take it as a simple publicity stunt on President Ortega's part," he said.

But President Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala, while conceding that the Nicaraguan move could be a ruse, said the United States should "maintain a more open position" toward any peace overtures.

Approval of the additional aid came after a brief floor debate, in which Michel argued that approving a stopgap bill whose only omission from last year's spending programs was Contra aid would have "sent exactly the wrong signal at the wrong time."

U.S. warships recover mines

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — American warships swept a strip of the central Persian Gulf on Wednesday to recover mines believed planted by the Iranian ship that U.S. helicopters attacked this week.

Commercial ships were warned away from the waters about 50 miles northeast of Bahrain and there were reports that some mines had been found.

Five Iranians were reported killed and 26 were captured in the helicopter raid on the Iranian vessel Monday night. It was the first direct American attack on Iranians in the two months since the United States began protecting shipping in the gulf.

Iran has vowed revenge for the American attack and the Iranian president said in New York that the two nations were moving toward war.

Britain announced it was closing Iran's military procurement office in London and urged a United Nations arms embargo because of Iranian attacks on Persian Gulf shipping.

President Ali Khamenei of Iran, in New York for a U.N. session, said the U.S. government had taken the road to war. "The people of the United States have a right to ask why is their government dragging them toward war," he said.

Despite the increased tension and the possibility of more floating mines, gulf-based shipping sources said a reflagged Kuwaiti gas carrier had begun a southbound voyage under U.S. escort.

The reported departure of the 46,723-ton Gas Prince from Kuwait would be the 10th convoy since President Reagan's program of escorting Kuwaiti tankers went into effect in mid-July.

But Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, asked in a Washington television interview whether a convoy was moving, replied, "Not that I know of."

In Washington, Pentagon officials said threats of Iranian reprisal for the ship attack would not deter Weinberger from leaving as scheduled for a five-day trip to the region.

He was to visit Bahrain, Saudi Arabia, Egypt and U.S. warships.

Iranian officials angrily promised retaliation for Monday's attack and U.S. embassies and military bases worldwide were warned to be alert for terrorist incidents.

U.S. officials were discussing how to return the 26 Iranians taken off the ship Iran Ajr to their homeland. The Iranians, described as "detainees" by the Pentagon, were being held aboard Navy ships in the gulf.

In the search for mines, there was no official word here on how many were recovered. But shipping executives, speaking on condition they not be named, said the Navy had found eight of the moored, contact-type explosives.

Gulf civilian radio monitors said Navy warships were warning all vessels to keep clear of the channel 50 miles northeast of Bahrain, an area where U.S. naval vessels often anchor when not on convoy duty.

Value tests are offered at the center which match students' interests and abilities to certain professions, Larson explained.

In addition, both classes teach students how to plan out their lives and how to make certain transitions. "Freshmen and sophomores usually take the 115 class and juniors and seniors usually take the 317 class," Larson said.

"The classes are mostly offered as a service course for students in any major," he said. "They are real popular; we get a high enrollment." Larson estimated that a total of 500 students are enrolled in the different sections of the two classes.

Students who take the classes usually are better prepared to enter the "real world," said Larson. "They are usually better able to make the critical decision each of us has to make in life. They also usually feel more competent as a person and have high esteem."

The 317 class concentrates on helping students prepare for transitions in the career world. Students are taught how to prepare resumes, how to have good interviews and how to dress for success.

"We put it in terms of going out and hiring yourself an employer," Larson said. "Know what you like and do well and then go out and find an employer who will hire you to do it."

The center also has a Career Information Library located in 149 SWKT where information on careers can be obtained. "We have information on the availability of certain careers. We have addresses and names of people you should write to," said Larson.

Club disputes with BYU over cancelled meeting

By DEBORAH HANCOCK
Universe Staff Writer

An off-campus club is considering a suit against BYU administration for cancelling a club rush meeting on Sept. 16 at the Harman Building Conference Center, said the club president.

Brett Horton, president of Samuel Hall, said he had signed a contract with the Conference Center to hold a one-time seminar meeting. The contract was broken at the last minute by the administration because of a question involving public advertising and recruiting, he said.

"We were paying customers. We should not have been treated that way," said Horton.

The contract was broken because the club had advertised in The Daily Universe, he said. "Although public advertising is prohibited by the Conference Center, my interpretation did not include The Daily Universe. I have seen several past advertisements in The Daily Universe for meetings in the Conference Center."

The question of recruiting was another reason for breaking the contract, said Horton. "We were only introducing the club to students. The initial recruiting was on Sept. 22." He said the purpose of the meeting was to interest the freshmen in the club.

The Harman Building Conference Center prohibits recruiting of individuals, promotion of a particular business and any public advertising for programs held in the Conference Center, said Beverly Johnson, manager of the center.

"Even though we are separate from BYU, we're still part of the administration. We must abide by the rules."

Johnson said this policy exists because the Harman Building is geared toward education. "We try not to be in competition with the commercial sector," she said.

Horton said he believes the final reason for the cancellation had to do with a question of affiliation with BYU. "Never once did we want to come across as a BYU-sponsored club. We made this clear on all our signs," he said.

Johnson said the contract was signed "Goldbrickers," and that she was unaware of the "Goldbrickers" affiliation with Samuel Hall.

"We're not trying to hide behind names," said Horton. "The club uses the original name (Goldbrickers) for business purposes."

The Conference Center was rented because of the large size and proximity to campus, he said.

Horton said he is upset because the contract was made with the Harman Building, not BYU administration.

Assistant Executive Vice President of Auxiliary Services John B. Stohlton said he was not directly involved with the cancellation of the meeting. "But if I had been involved, the results would have been the same."

Samuel Hall members knew the consequences of going off-campus last year, he said. "There can be no misunderstanding. The issue was clearly explained both oral and written."

Club members failed to disclose the purpose of the meeting, he said. "We wouldn't allow Sigma Chi from the University of Utah to use our facilities. I see little difference in purpose between the two."

Quality of workers attracts businesses to Utah Valley

By CHANTELLE ROUGEAU
Universe Staff Writer

The unique characteristics of Utah Valley have brought almost 40 new companies to the area in the past 21 years, according to a local development association.

In 1986, six new industries brought 633 jobs to Utah Valley, according to Paul Stout, director of marketing/public relations for Utah Valley Industrial Development Association.

Honest, educated workers

Stout attributes this success to the "dedicated, honest and hard-working" work force, close proximity to Salt Lake City, low taxes and the availability of a highly educated population. "Coming from another state, I am very pleased with the educated work force in Utah Valley," said Bill Waite, production controller for Transera Corporation. "We can draw skilled, intelligent laborers from local colleges and universities."

"We chose Utah because of the people. Our studies indicated that the Utah worker is of higher quality than any of his neighbors in the West," said George McGuigen, president of Stouffer Foods Corporation.

Labor costs lower

According to Stout, worker productivity is considered excellent in this area for many reasons. The average hourly earnings of production workers in the United States is $9.68, in Utah the average is $9.57, but in Utah Valley the average wage is $7.81.

"Direct labor costs at our Utah plants are 20 percent better than at our facilities elsewhere," said Rod Malsom, plant engineer for American Greetings.

The industries have few problems with drug and alcohol abuse. "You don't have to worry about drug control or alcoholism on the job in Utah," said Connie Hansen, general manager of Burrelle's Press Clippings.

"If you're hiring a Utah person, you have better than a 98 percent chance of getting someone free of those substances."

Lower taxes

The tax benefits offered in Utah Valley also provide a low-cost location for industry. According to a UVIDA study on a $40 million project, the taxes in Salt Lake Valley would be $441,528 annually, but the same project in Utah Valley would have taxes of $332,800 annually.

UVIDA provides prospective industries information on every aspect of bringing their business to Utah Valley. They are currently working with six companies in various stages of this "slow process," said Stout.

In their 21-year history, the non-profit organization has brought organizations like Novell, Stouffer Foods, Net Line and Signetics to the valley.

"We wine and dine them, only without the wine," said Stout.

NEWS DIGEST

Burger says Bork deserves confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, stirred by what he called unprecedented disinformation, declared on Wednesday that Supreme Court nominee Robert H. Bork is not "an extremist any more than I'm an extremist" and deserves confirmation.

Burger, in an extraordinary appearance for a sitting or former member of the high court, told the Senate Judiciary Committee, "If Judge Bork is not in the mainstream then neither am I. It would astonish me to think he's an extremist any more than I'm an extremist."

In particular, he criticized paid newspaper advertisements that have suggested dire consequences for the nation if Bork's nomination is confirmed.

The hearings, despite Burger's appearance and a heated exchange later between committee chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., and Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, were overshadowed to some extent by Biden's midday announcement that he was withdrawing from the presidential race.

Biden took time out from presiding over the hearings to tell a news conference he was quitting the campaign in the wake of damaging disclosures that he committed plagiarism and exaggerated his academic accomplishments.

He said he couldn't expend the effort to get his candidacy back on track and still be closely involved in the hearings on Bork, whose appointment he said would "profoundly affect our future."

Biden withdraws from presidential race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Joseph Biden ended his quest for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination "with incredible reluctance" on Wednesday, saying the "exaggerated shadow" of mistakes made it impossible to continue his candidacy.

Biden withdrew from the campaign after a week in which his campaign was rocked by admissions of plagiarism and false claims about his academic record.

The Delaware Democrat is the second candidate to be forced from the race by questions of character and integrity.

"I made some mistakes," Biden, his wife at his side, told a room crowded with reporters. "Now the exaggerated shadow of those mistakes has begun to obscure the essence of my candidacy and the essence of Joe Biden."

"And although it's awfully clear to me what choice I have to make, I have to tell you honestly I do it with incredible reluctance and it makes me angry. I'm angry with myself for having been put in the position — put myself in the position — of having to make this choice," he said.

Senate to restore Gramm-Rudman Law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Wednesday to restore the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law, renewing the threat of across-the-board spending cuts unless Congress and the president reach a compromise on reducing the deficit.

The bill was passed 64 to 34 and sent to President Reagan, whose support for Gramm-Rudman has wavered recently. Administration officials said no decision had been made on whether Reagan should veto the bill.

The revised plan, approved by the House on Tuesday, would bring back the law's threat of automatic spending cuts, redrafting a provision the Supreme Court found unconstitutional in the original.

But it would abandon the original timetable for a balanced budget by fiscal 1991. That goal would take until fiscal 1993, with most of the deficit reduction put off until after the 1988 election.

Like the original Gramm-Rudman passed two years ago, the plan was an amendment to a bill raising the ceiling on the national debt. The December 1985 vote first put the limit above $2 trillion. The new bill would allow $2.8 trillion in Treasury borrowing, enough to last until May 1989.

Three AIDS carriers return to school

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Three brothers whose exposure to AIDS made them pariahs in their rural hometown enrolled in a new school Wednesday without incident and with a hesitant welcome from schoolmates and parents.

Deputies patrolled the grounds at Gocio Elementary School. And officials reported that 120 of the 615 pupils stayed home. Up to a dozen pupils were withdrawn. The usual absentee rate is about 3 percent.

But the day had encouraging moments for the Rays — 10-year-old Ricky, Robert, 9, and Randy, 8.

Ricky found welcome cards on his desk, said Clifford Ray, the boys' father.

"Everything was positive," said the boys' mother, Louise. "One of (the boys) said they had to assign seats in the lunchroom because everyone wanted to sit next to them."

The Ray family moved to Sarasota because school board policy allows children exposed to AIDS to attend school if they pose no threat to children and are undergoing medical treatment.

Senate approves Utah programs' funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than $27 million for Interior Department programs in Utah, including $10 million as payments in lieu of taxes for county governments, has been approved by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The bill also includes language added Tuesday by Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, opposing a National Park Service proposal to limit or eliminate auto traffic in Bryce Canyon National Park. Garn's rider would require the Park Service to obtain Congressional approval before eliminating autos in the park.

After the full Senate acts on the measure it must clear a House-Senate conference to resolve differences with a bill the House passed earlier. The measure is likely to be wrapped into an omnibus spending bill with most other federal appropriations measures at the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 30.

If approved by the Senate and signed by President Reagan, the bill would provide Utah State University with $135,000 for fish and wildlife research and the University of Utah $8.8 million for its Mineral Institute and $400,000 for its investigation of new ways to separate minerals from ores.

Glen Canyon National Recreation Area would receive $500,000 as operating money to handle increasing tourist visits.

Father pleads for safer street

By CONNIE ANDERSEN
Universe Staff Writer

A father brought his crippled son to the Orem City Council meeting Tuesday to plead for better safety controls on 400 South.

Keith Haines, 536 E. 400 South, requested a meeting with the city by the end of October to discuss safety options and give input from the neighbors.

Haines said his son was hit by a truck in front of his home on May 12, 1986. A five-year-old boy was recently hit and killed at the same location. "In many ways it (the five-year-old's accident) was like deja vu," he said. In the past year, six accidents occurred there, Haines said.

In other business, the council approved contracts for $54,000 to two companies for developing a logo for the city, a marketing plan for Orem Fitness Center and a community information program.

Also a crossing guard was approved for Main Street near Cherry Hill Elementary School, and the council denied a request for additional access to 400 West from Cherry Tree Professional Plaza at 171 N. 400 West.

Utah author to speak at UVCC forum

Carol Lynn Pearson will be the Brown Bag forum speaker at the Utah Valley Community College at noon Oct. 2.

Pearson has written novels, articles, poems, musical programs, educational films and plays, some being "My Turn On Earth"and "Cypher in the Snow."

Pearson has been featured in People Magazine, on Good Morning America and the Oprah Winfrey Show, among others, according to a UVCC press release. Her most recent book, "Goodbye, I Love You,"is an autobiography telling of her life with a homosexual husband who died of AIDS.

The forum will be in the student center ballroom at UVCC.

Senators back AIDS test

WASHINGTON (AP) — Utah's Republican U.S. senators say they favor mandatory AIDS testing of some groups and they oppose proposals to guarantee civil rights of people who have the fatal virus.

"I'm concerned about that," Sen. Orrin Hatch said.

"I don't think we should grant civil rights in constitutional law for a disease."

Several bills requiring mandatory testing for the virus, which attacks its victims' immune systems, have been discussed in Congress.

"I think any time anybody has a deadly disease, they are going to have to give up some of their rights for the rights of the majority," said Sen. Jake Garn. "What about all the rights of the people to be protected from AIDS? Their rights are paramount over the rights of those who have the disease."

Health officials say the United States has about 41,700 confirmed AIDS cases.

Some estimates say between 1 and 5 million people may have been exposed and are carriers of AIDS, which is spread through sexual contact and intravenous drug abuse.

War is theme of play opening in Margetts

By BRIAN K. STAPLEY
Universe Staff Writer

One is a wounded Soviet soldier. The other is an American who drifted too far from his platoon. Their lives collide when they become trapped in the same cave in Central America and must struggle for survival.

The pair's shared crisis forms the premise for a new drama, "Uniforms," that premiers tonight in the Margetts Arena Theater, HFAC.

Tom Rogers, a BYU professor of languages, is cast as the Soviet with G. Webster Latimer as the American. The play focuses on the emotional turmoil of the event as well as the commonalities and differences the two share.

Graduate student Traci Hainsworth, director of the play, envisions the conflict between the two men as a strategic game of chess. "They are enemies, but in their shared crisis, they must try to acknowledge each other's humanity.

"They both face some decisions that are pretty impossible and their fight for control ends in a stalemate with many questions left unanswered," said Hainsworth.

She also said she hopes audiences will walk away from the play wondering how they would react in the same situation without condemning the characters for how they reacted.

BYU student Stephen Pullen wrote "Uniforms" and said the concept for the production came from a BYU honors class discussion of Rousseau's philosophy that war is illogical.

Set designer Neal Vanderpool has transformed the Margetts Theater into a coliseum-type environment for the project. By seating the audience three and four feet above the set and forcing them to peer down into the hole, the audience will get "at least a subconscious feeling of being trapped along with the actors," said Hainsworth.

The stage design has been described as environmental theater and is designed to create a feeling of confinement. The set has also been designed to seat the audience on all four sides of the hole to enhance the feeling of being "trapped."

The top of the hole is located near where stage lights are usually hung and vines and branches will cover the threshold to the pit. A light mist and falling water will also add to the effect.

The bottom of the pit measures nine feet by 10 feet and is made up of multiple levels of dirt.

"I wanted to expose the audience and help them feel in tune with the environment that has been set on stage," said Vanderpool.

The drama is the product of the Playwright/Director/Actor (PDA) Workshop at BYU. The workshop gives students the experience of developing new works for production. Many of the same people associated with the PDA workshop are again working on this production.

"It's one of the best PDA works I've read," said Hainsworth who was originally asked to assist the director on the project. She later inherited full directorship when the faculty member slated for the job accepted employment elsewhere.

The drama will continue playing Tuesdays through Saturdays through Oct. 10 at 7:30 p.m. There will also be a 4:00 p.m. matinee performance on Oct. 5.

For tickets and play information, call the drama theater box office, 378-7447.

No sympathy for NFL strikers

Striking National Football League players had better not come here for sympathy. We ran out of sympathy the last time they went on strike, only five years ago.

Within that five year span, the average wage of pro football players has risen from $90,000 to $230,000. The Wall Street Journal estimates that the average team spends $837,000 a game on player salaries, plus $17,000 in fringe benefits. Revenue from television is at an all-time high. But players, or more succinctly, the union, are not satisfied.

The union wants unlimited free agency for players after they have been in the league for four years. Free agency would permit a player to enter the market after his contract expires and name his price. The player's current team would be forced to at least match the highest offer made by other teams throughout the league.

NFL owners are understandably wary of such an agreement.

Players such as John Elway, who makes nearly $65,000 a game with the Denver Broncos, have the potential to drive the league into bankruptcy.

UNIVERSE OPINION

But the union, in its drive for self-gratification, has failed to realize that not every player is a John Elway or a Brian Bosworth. The majority of NFL players, who can expect an average of only three years on the gridiron, are probably more in need of adequate pension plans than free agency.

The union seems to be out of touch with the players they are representing.

Many players have stated publicly that free agency is not worth a strike. New York Jets defensive end Mark Gastineau and Los Angeles Raiders quarterback Mark Wilson, who played at BYU, have vowed to cross picket lines. Many others share the view of Dallas Cowboy quarterback Danny White, who said on the Cable News Network recently that while he would strike, he was anxious to get back to work.

Equally disturbing is the apparent disregard for the fans who flock to the stadiums by the thousands and number in the millions of television viewers. Many fans feel cheated by an entertainment medium that is based almost entirely on their support.

Cheated also are the thousands of food vendors, custodial workers and countless others involved in the service industries related to football. Services, incidentally, where the average worker makes much less than the average football player.

NFL owners can share the blame for ignoring the fans. Experts predicted as early as last year's Super Bowl that a strike was inevitable without cooperation on both sides. Yet the owners appear as reluctant as the union to bargain in good faith.

One has to wonder, however, if too much attention is being placed on what is in reality a medium of entertainment only. Perhaps there are events in the news with more far-reaching implications.

Consider the Bork confirmation hearings. Never before in the history of the United States has a Supreme Court nominee been subjected to such close scrutiny. Questions of how the balance of power in our country should operate are being addressed. Our Constitution, in its bicentennial year, is being tested as never before.

The Persian Gulf, of immense strategic importance to the United States, is in a constant state of crisis. After the United States attack on a mine-bearing Iranian vessel in international waters,The Associated Press reported that Iranian President Ali Khamenei had vowed revenge. "The U.S. shall receive a proper response for this abominable act," said Khamenei. He went on to say that retaliation would not be confined to the Persian Gulf.

The AIDS crisis, human rights violations and a budget deficit in the billions of dollars are other news items more than deserving of our attention.

It is possible, however, that the time given to us by the NFL strike is a blessing in disguise.

Sundays could once again be used for their original purpose, a chance to get our lives in order for the coming week.

More time could be spent with a book or magazine that challenges us intellectually or expands us mentally.

And most promising of all, countless wives could rejoice at becoming reacquainted with their favorite armchair quarterback.

The above is the opinion of the Editorial Board of The Daily Universe which comprises the associate publisher, editor, opinion page editor, a teacher of opinion writing and a student staff member. BYU needs forced bussing

With this football season's concerns descending upon us, such as whether Bob Jensen's hand is too sweaty or whether injuries will decimate the line, we need to talk of serious things — bussing in the bleachers.

Bussing provides Texas A & M a unique way to foster school spirit. When the Aggies score a touchdown, a fellow follows tradition and kisses, or, as a Victorian Englishman might say, "busses" his date.

What an interesting idea.

While each year at BYU we debate about quarterbacking fashions and Swiss-cheese offensive lines, Texas A & M has excited sell-out crowds at every game, even during losing seasons.

What if we adopted this tradition at BYU, or better yet, expanded on it? Instead of waiting until a touchdown, BYU fans might follow this custom when BYU had a net gain on a play.

Can you imagine the cheering?

Even if the 'Y' were losing by 97 points, the stands would remain jammed, packed with enthusiastic fans — all of them in favor of forced bussing.

We shouldn't be naive about this idea, however. Disadvantages do exist. A custom like this could quickly get out of hand.

Really.

People not riding UTA might begin bussing to and from the game.

Still, the idea is worth investigating. For example, we could use the tradition in basketball season. Rude fans here would stop booing officials because the battle on the floor would be the least interesting thing going on. Any controversy about a shot clock to speed up offenses would end. Fans would flock to see the games and cheer madly with each slam dunk.

Why stop there? Sports like lacrosse that rarely get student support could encourage attendance by offering the obvious — free bussing.

Of course, those who like pep rallies and cheerleaders might not favor this proposal. Such methods might render old-fashioned devices for school spirit obsolete. But, if we think again, we could save valuable dollars if we eliminated things like the ASBYU Athletics Office and cheerleading.

Further, BYU could cover any outstanding debts, finance the new Communications Building and the new Art Museum. Students could get free tuition. People would pay more than their loose change to get a seat at the games. The law of supply and demand would force BYU's net economic worth into Fortune Magazine.

Simply put, this collegiate version of forced bussing could keep BYU football exciting, even in years when the Cougars aren't anywhere near the top 20.

So, as we sometimes worry about life after football, as we start to struggle with the idea that the quarterbacks we have now may not be as good looking as Jim McMahon, we need to remember one thing. What are football games for, anyway, if they do not help us have a good time?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Submissive one

Editor,

I am writing this in regard to the article entitled "Obedience is good, but so is thinking," that was printed in the Sept. 10 issue of The Daily Universe. I would like to defend us, the "submissive ones."

I don't feel submissive or non-thinking just because I don't tell every rude person I meet that they are rude. Maybe you feel that way when insulted by someone you don't know and don't care about, but I sure don't. I don't like rude people any more than the next person but I don't let it worry me.

My point is, I don't think it is my duty to make sure everyone is polite every second of the day.

Now, I would like to say one more thing about those rude people who are serving us. Anyone who has ever had a job serving others knows that job is one of the toughest, not because of the job itself, but because of the rude people you have to serve all the time, everyday.

Have a little understanding. Most probably the reason they are being rude is because someone like you was rude to them first.

Sure, there are some times when we need to stand up and tell people what we think of their actions. I don't think that every time is appropriate. Overlooking a scowl from the cashier or an impatient food server at the cafeteria can hardly be called being overly submissive or non-thinking.

Fine reporting

Editor,

Most letters to the editor are in the form of complaint. Instead, I would like to write a letter of appreciation for the fine job of reporting events and putting them all together in a manner which enables students to have a chance to read about current events without the charge of the city newspaper.

I would also like to put in a plea for people to stop complaining. I know that there are things written in The Daily Universe that I personally don't agree with. I can also accept the fact that everyone has to have their own opinion and that we can't all agree all the time.

It is also true that you must express your own opinion or people will trample you with theirs. In expressing your opinion, you must remember that you can't please everyone and that not everyone will agree with you. You have to hope people will be adult enough to understand that this is your opinion and they can take it or leave it. You must also take into consideration that everyone with an opinion is human and everyone who is human makes mistakes.

Everyone has to decide for himself what he values and/or enjoys. Some people enjoy hunting while others think it a great sin to kill innocent animals.

One person may have different opinions and preferences. If you have an opinion, express it. My challenge to you is to understand that not everyone is going to agree with or be pleased by your opinion. Try to listen to their opinion and, although you may still find it in opposition with yours, talk about it, discuss it, write about it, but don't complain about it.

There are better ways of solving problems than by being a whiny complainer. All the world needs is one more complaint.

No Haagen-Dazs?

Editor,

It is true that the BYU Bookstore carries nearly everything that a college student could possibly want. From school supplies and records to clothing and computers, the bookstore offers a diversity of items to satisfy our collegiate needs. However, despite its virtues, the bookstore lacks the one essential item that would make it complete — Haagen-Dazs bars. No offense to the BYU Dairy, but Haagen-Dazs bars are definitely the epitome of ice cream decadence.

In a recent study by the San Francisco Chronicle, Haagen-Dazs was voted the number-one ice cream bar. The rich, creamy ice cream dipped in imported dark or milk chocolate is a taste sensation that can be compared to no other.

In keeping with its tradition of excellence, shouldn't BYU carry the number-one ice cream bar on campus? I feel that such an addition to campus life would promote higher school spirit, boost our mighty Cougar pride and increase academic excellence.

It is true that they cost excessively more than the average 19-cent fudge bar.

However, for those of us who have partaken of such a delicacy, we know that every cent is well worth it.

Some argue that Haagen-Dazs bars are just too rich. But in reality, can chocolate, or for that matter people, ever be too rich?

Haagen-Dazs is not just a passion — it is a way of life.

Revise standards

Editor,

Whatever happened to Standards? Is it a thing of the past? Like polygamy, does it cease to exist? Maybe it wasn't even there in the first place, maybe it's a trick.

Didn't I sign a contract saying, "Grubby' attire may be worn only in the immediate areas of residence halls and at informal outdoor activities ... 'grubby' attire includes tank tops ... dresses or skirts above the knee or those with slits above the knee are immodest and inappropriate."

I didn't read anywhere anything about "it's all right if the slit is above the knee, as long as you don't have knobby knees." Or, "Tank tops may not be worn, unless you can use a number 15 suntan lotion." Or, do I dare say it — gasp, "No braless-look except on Thursdays?"

Heck, no. The contract says tank tops, NO slits above the k and NO bra-less looks (oh dear, I it again).

During the Victorian period, it immodest for even the legs of fu ture to show, but hey, these are 80s, right? Right, but still mini-sk that are only two inches above crotch and slits that go clear up to middle of the seat are tacky and gusting.

One can't compare a swimsuit flannel nightgown and say the sw suit is immodest. That's like comp ing apples to eggs. Instead, comp swimsuits to swimsuits, just there are modest mini-skirts and modest mini-skirts.

But where does modest end and modest begin? Why not go back to old "Youth Conference Standar where shorts have to be at least be the finger-tips, with the a straight? Could it possibly be simple?

"Oh, sure," the girls argue, "th are tons of guys out there without socks on." Do you know one of reasons why they say socks must worn? Women can look really nice skirt with nylons or no socks, guys in a three-piece suit would l really shabby without socks. Come now, what guy is "lame" enough not wear socks with a suit? But w jeans or slacks, the no-sock look OK. Same with the mini-skirt, as l as it isn't too mini.

So, Standards, let's get to work either enforce the dress code or rev it!

USSR not sincere about world peace

On May 28, 1987, 19-year old Mathias Rust touched down his Cessna 172 on Red Square in Moscow. His mission — a plea for world peace.

Three months later, Rust was sentenced to four years in a Soviet labor camp for charges of illegal entry to the Soviet Union, violation of international flight rules and "malicious hooliganism."

During his trial before the Supreme Soviet court, Rust testified that he sought "the source of peace, and the source of peace is not in Washington, but in Moscow."

How ironic, then, that Rust's ideal source of peace should remove his freedom so quickly and lock him away in a labor camp, simply for expressing his views on world peace in a somewhat extravagant manner.

Granted, the Soviet Union has never been big on freedom of speech, especially when the person speaking isn't even Soviet. And the outrageous display of "hooliganism" created when Rust landed in Red Square — well, those sort of things don't go over big with the Soviets, either.

But during this so-called period of glasnost, or openness, which the Soviet Union is now trying to achieve in the world's eyes, an incident such as the successful infiltration of a young West German pilot to Red Square on a peace mission should have been taken as a compliment.

The Soviets don't know a good thing when they see it.

Instead of charging Rust with illegal entry and "malicious hooliganism," they should have greeted him with open arms. A brave, young comrade from West Germany risks life and limb to promote world peace in the Soviet Union. Think of all the good glasnost PR the Soviets missed.

Of course, the Soviets weren't completely off-track. Rust's trial was open to the public and the international media, a precedent which was meant to show that glasnost extends even to the Soviet judicial system.

Rust's infiltration through Soviet airspace was also a good excuse to spring clean the Soviet military. Personnel on all levels found themselves suddenly reduced to guard duty because of either a mechanical error on the part of radar, or ignorance on the part of those monitoring them.

But was justice done on the part of Rust? Giving Rust a four-year stint in a "light regime" labor camp can hardly be declared an attempt at achieving openness and freedom of speech on the part of the Soviet Union, much less striving for world peace. If anything, the incident only served to ignite more discord in world affairs.

In the eyes of many nations, the Soviet's reaction was too harsh, too cold. Too Soviet.

Rust admits he made a mistake. "It's the greatest mistake I've made in my life," he said, according to a Sept. 3 Daily Universe article. "But my fli did not have any aggressive intentions," he a stated.

But to exile Rust to a "corrective colony of re forced regime," as called for by Soviet prosecu Vladmir Andreyev, is a bit extreme. It seems t Rust is not being punished so much for what he d but for the embarrassment he caused on the par many high-ranking Kremlin officials. Putting R "out of sight, out of mind" in a labor camp was j the quickest way to help the Soviets save face.

Rust would not have received the same recept and treatment in a Western nation. While it's t that most countries would have served Rust so sort of reprimand, it would not have been on t order of the punishment given. In West Germa Rust has become like a folk hero — a symbol peace for the children of tomorrow to follow.

Different place, same situation: A Cessna 1 comes to a smooth landing just below Capitol Hil Washington D.C. A young man emerges, possi from Canada or South America. His mission — plea for world peace.

He has just flown thousands of miles to mak statement before the whole world. He believes t United States is the only possible source fr which world peace can emerge.

You decide the rest.

Spiker shines on, off court

By SUZANNE GIBBS

It is said that faith precedes the miracle and that is exactly what Head Coach Elaine Michaelis and the BYU Women's Volleyball Team exercised when they recruited 6-foot Canadian middle blocker and outside hitter, Marinda Gorbahn.

Gorbahn, a native of Prince George, British Columbia, majoring in elementary education, says she was both pleased and surprised when BYU offered her a position on the their nationally ranked team. "They never even saw me play. All of our correspondence was done over the phone and through the mail," she commented.

According to Michaelis, Gorbahn's high school coach sent a letter to BYU notifying them of her interest to attend. "We received that letter very late in the recruiting process— about two weeks before the intent to register deadline," she stated.

After contacting coaches from the National Canadian Team, Michaelis received only good reports. "The Canadian teams praised her abilities and actually discouraged her to choose BYU because they wanted to take advantage of her talents. We relied on our faith in the comments about her and we are very pleased."

Gorbahn says she received several offers from schools in Canada before accepting BYU's. "I've always wanted to come here but when it came time to choose a college, I almost didn't choose BYU. I received other offers from Canadian schools and since they were closer to home, they were more attractive. I was really nervous because I didn't know anyone here at BYU."

Once Gorbahn's decision was made, coming to BYU turned out to be the best for everyone. "I love it here – everyone is so nice," expressed Gorbahn. "The team is wonderful – it's like you instantly have 13 friends."

Gorbahn isn't the only one that is pleased. "When we came back from Europe and saw what she could do, we were very pleased," commented Michaelis. "You can't replace an All-American like Sari Virtanen overnight but Marinda is definitely one of our players for the future."

Coming from a family of five older brothers, Gorbahn learned early that she loved athletics. "All of my brothers were basketball stars so naturally I wanted to be just like them," she said. "It wasn't until the middle of my high school years that my coach turned me around and got me interested in volleyball. Once that happened, I loved volleyball and decided that it was the only way I could get through school."

Marinda also attributes a lot of her success to support from her family. "My older brothers have always been very supportive in everything I've done. One of them had an interest in volleyball and helped nurture the spark in me."

Spark is exactly what Gorbahn had in her high school career. She not only played volleyball for her high school, she played on both a provincial team and a club team. She served as the captain of the provincial team which finished first at the Northern Winter Games and second at the National Team Challenge Cup. She was also selected to go to the Junior National Team Camp.

'Y' golfers finish second at tourney

By TOM E. NORMAN
Universe Sports Writer

Four good final rounds by UCLA gave the Bruins the team championship over the Cougars while Nancy Kessler of Washington came back to win the individual title at the BYU Invitational golf tournament at Hobble Creek Golf Course Wednesday.

UCLA added a 73 and three 74s to their second round advantage and finished at an even 900, 27 strokes ahead of second-place BYU, while a weak, final nine holes by second-round leader Paige Wery of UCLA opened the door for Kessler to win the individual title.

BYU coach Gary Howard said experience made the difference for UCLA. "It was UCLA's sixth round of competition this year, while it was only our third," he said. Howard added that only one Bruin didn't play in the national championships last year.

The top finisher for BYU was sophomore Paula Suarez, from Bogota, Colombia. Suarez carded a third round 3-over par 75 to finish at 227, six strokes behind Kessler.

Adding to the Cougar's second-place finish were Karen-Mike Zielenski at 234 and both Robin Barry and Adriana Gomez at 237.

Barry said UCLA had "four especially good rounds" Wednesday and added, "none of us had it together at the right time."

Other team scores were Washington at 931, CS-Long Beach at 956, Hawaii at 970, Washington State at 972, Nebraska at 1016, Oregon at 1043 and Oregon State at 1151.

'Y' QB Mike Young leaves football team

Mike Young, BYU's third-string quarterback, has quit the BYU football team.

"We had a long talk," said BYU Coach LaVell Edwards. "We both agreed that Mike's future — especially his goal of entering medical school — would best be served by devoting full attention to his studies."

Academics was partly the reason why Young decided to forego his senior year with the Cougars, according to Edwards. "His future beyond college football was a major consideration in his decision," he said.

Young has a GPA of 3.73 at BYU.

Young hadn't had any playing time this season.

Young replaced Bob Jensen in the Freedom Bowl last year against UCLA and led his team to a touchdown, the only TD the Cougars scored in the game.

He was 7-12-0 for 97 yards in the contest.

"Mike is an outstanding young man," said Edwards.

Free agents flock to NFL teams

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The mad dash was on. Players from everywhere — Arena Football to high school — were showing up and calling in as NFL owners tried to field teams of free agents and non-striking veterans to keep the games going.

Already, with the NFL players' strike in only its first day Tuesday, there were signs of bad blood as strikers shouted "scab" and made veiled threats to those who crossed picket lines. Others laughed at owners' plans to field strike teams.

"The fans are paying big money to see superstars," said Seattle Seahawks rookie linebacker Brian Bosworth.

"The fans won't accept 'scab' football. It'll be sandlot football."

NFL owners plan to field teams of non-strikers that will resume the regular NFL schedule on Sunday, Oct. 4 after one week off. Many teams already have signed a full complement of free agents, and some veterans — including Gary Hogeboom, Marc Wilson and Mark Gastineau — say they may play.

Most coaches, meanwhile, say they will have no trouble being ready with new teams in two weeks.

"We were scrimmaging the Los Angeles Raiders after three days in training camp," Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said. "It would be no problem playing a game in 10 days."

Although Tuesday was the normal day off for most teams, some striking players set up picket lines, and a few crossed them.

Wilson, a former BYU star, cited contract reasons for going to work.
